Risk factors

The investments of the sub-fund are subject to fluctuations in the markets in which the sub-fund has invested. By its nature, the equity market is characterized by higher volatility, but generally delivers better performance over the long term compared to other types of investments. Emerging markets have historically shown higher growth rates than developed countries, and over the long term, stocks in emerging markets have historically performed better than stocks in developed markets. However, investment in the sub-fund may carry a higher degree of risk due to the political and economic situation in emerging markets, which may affect the value of investments. Investments in securities of issuers from emerging countries involve special considerations and risks, including risks associated with international investment in general, such as currency fluctuation risk, the risk of investing in countries with underdeveloped capital markets, limited liquidity risk, and increased price volatility risk.
